ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This thesis could not successfully complete without the kindness of advisor's team. First and foremost to my major advisor, Associate Professor Dr. Ruth Sirisunyaluck, who gave good advice, appreciate suggestion and encouraged me to "just write up" this thesis since start until successful. My co-advisor, Associate Professor Dr. Wallratat Intarucamporn and Associate Professor Rampaipan Apichatpongchai who gave comment and good suggestion. And the special thanks for Assistant Professor Dr. Jiraporn Unchai and Associate Professor Dr. Suraphol Sreshthaputra for their kindness and took time out of thier busy schedule to serve as my external examiner.

I wish to special thank for all of farmer housewives in Chiang Mai province for devoting time to give information. Thanks for the Graduated School, Chiang Mai University for some financial support.

Also appreciate to thank all of lecturers in Department of Agricultural Economics and Agricultural Extension. They are my source of knowledge. Many thanks to all staffs at Department of Agricultural Economics and Agricultural Extension for their helpful in providing facilities. Also, I would like to thank a group of doctoral degree students of Agricultural Extension and Rural Development Program for their encouragement and enjoyable experience.

Finally, My graduation would not be achieved without best wish from my parents, Mr. Pradit Nayong and Mrs. Sirirat Nayong, who support me spiritually throughout my life and always gives me greatest love. Special thanks to my husband for his encouragement. For those names not listed here, I would love to say thank you for all their support throughout the period of this research.

Sansanee Nayong
